1. Take everything out of the pantry.
2. Wash the shelves – an environmentally friendly (not to mention wallet-friendly) option is to make a mixture of equal parts white vinegar and water in a spray bottle. Allow shelves to dry while you sort and organize.
3. Get a big garbage bag and throw away anything that has expired or gone bad, and maybe this is the time to clear out any unhealthy food.
4. Based on what you have left over, group your pantry's contents into categories, like spices, snacks, baking supplies, canned goods, grains, and oils.
5. If anyone in your home has to eat gluten free, consider grouping the gluten free products together on their own shelf so they are easy to find and can prevent cross-contamination.
6. Then as you place things back on the shelves, make a point of putting things you use less often towards the back, and things you use all the time toward the front. Also place anything that is close to its expiration date near the front.
7. Step back and admire your clean, organized pantry.
